Please see <http://www.dtcc.edu/academics/student-handbook/collegewide-policies> [54] for Delaware Tech's policy on illegal drugs and the unlawful use of alcohol.

Delaware Tech is committed to providing students and employees with a safe environment in which to learn and work. OTHER INFORMATION

Computer Use, Copyright Infringement, and File Sharing

Acceptable Use of Delaware Tech's Electronic Networks Policy

Access to and use of the Delaware Technical Community College computing and electronic networks resources are privileges granted to students, staff, faculty and members of the College community. By using the computing resources made available by the College, users consent to utilize such resources in accordance with and subject to Delaware Tech's Acceptable Use of Electronic Networks Policy. For more information on Delaware Tech's Acceptable Use of Electronic Networks Policy, please see <http://www.dtcc.edu/academics/student-handbook/collegewide-policies> [54].

Members of the College community who utilize Delaware Tech's computing and electronic networks are expected to do so in an efficient, ethical, and legal manner that supports the College's educational mission. Failure to comply with Delaware Tech's Acceptable Use of Electronic Networks Policy, applicable state, local and federal laws and regulations, as well as any other College policy or administrative procedure may result in suspension or revocation of network privileges. Moreover, misuse of the College's computing and electronic networks could result in criminal prosecution or other disciplinary action under state and federal laws.

Copyrighted Materials

Users of Delaware Tech's computing and electronic networks, as with all members of the College community, are required to comply with copyright laws. Copyright laws protect the ownership rights of an author in work which the author creates. Works protected by copyright laws include music, motion pictures and other audiovisual works, and literary materials.

While music, movies, and books are commonly associated with copyright protection, copyright laws also protect Delaware Tech's course materials. Some companies ask students to post course materials, such as tests, lecture notes, and syllabi, on websites geared toward college students. Delaware Tech's students are reminded that these course materials are protected by copyright and can only be reproduced with the instructor and College's permission.

Furthermore, faculty, instructors, and other College employees are encouraged to be mindful of copyright laws in generating course materials. Please see <http://www.dtcc.edu/academics/student-handbook/collegewide-policies> [54] and <http://www.dtcc.edu/sites/default/files/copyright.pdf> [57] for more information on copyright issues in the classroom.

Unauthorized Distribution of Copyrighted Materials

Federal copyright laws, including the Digital Millennium Copyright Act (DMCA), make it illegal to download, upload, or file-share copyrighted materials without permission of the copyright holder. Copyright infringers are subject to potentially severe criminal and civil penalties for violating federal copyright law. Federal law specifies civil liabilities of litigation costs, attorney fees, and damages in the amount of $750 to $30,000 for each work infringed. An individual who violates copyright laws in particularly egregious circumstances can be fined up to $150,000. Likewise, individuals may also be subject to criminal liability, such as the possibility of substantial imprisonment, for violating federal copyright laws. A more extensive review of these penalties can be found at <http://www.copyright.gov/title17/92chap5.html#505> [58].

In addition, members of the Delaware Tech community who violate copyright laws are subject to discipline under the College's Acceptable Use of Electronic Networks Policy. Delaware Tech's Division of Information and Educational Technology (DIET) investigates all allegations of copyright infringement, including violations of the DMCA, on the College's computing and electronic networks. If, as determined by DIET, the College finds that a member of the Delaware Tech community has violated copyright laws, then that individual's access to the College's computing and electronic networks may be subject to termination or suspension or other disciplinary action under Delaware Tech's Student Rights and Standards of Student Conduct Policy. The College's Student Rights and Standards of Student Conduct Policy can be found at <http://www.dtcc.edu/academics/student-handbook/collegewide-policies> [54]. Delaware Tech reserves the right to choose how best to respond to copyright violations under the circumstances.

Peer to Peer File Sharing of Copyrighted Material

Peer to Peer (P2P) file sharing technology describes applications in which users employ the Internet to exchange files with each other directly or through a mediating server. Generally, P2P file sharers store files on their own computers with file-sharing programs that permit other users to download files onto their own computers. Common P2P file sharing networks include Kazaa, Bearshare, Gnutella, and Bittorrent.

Using P2P file-sharing software to copy or distribute copyrighted works such as music, games, and videos without permission of the copyright holder is a violation of copyright law that potentially exposes the offender to the civil and criminal penalties outlined above. Similarly, utilizing P2P file sharing networks in such a manner is a violation of Delaware Tech's Acceptable Use of Electronic Networks Policy. P2P networks may also threaten the security of users' computers due to viruses, malware, and spyware that may be transmitted in the file-sharing process. Furthermore, P2P file sharing can impede the legitimate traffic on the College's network.

Delaware Tech has gone to extensive lengths to combat the illegal use of P2P file sharing on the College's computers and networks. All College computers are equipped with commercial software that prevents users from engaging in illegal P2P file sharing. In addition, Delaware Tech employs bandwidth shaping technology to prohibit P2P file sharing on all of the College's wireless networks. Likewise, the college has restricted access of all desktop computers' internal storage drives which results in the revocation of a user's ability to install software applications.

The College annually informs users of the College's computing and electronic networks about the consequences of utilizing P2P file sharing technology. The College periodically reviews this Policy to ensure compliance with federal law. Delaware Tech encourages all users to be informed about file sharing issues to prevent illegal downloading. A comprehensive list of legal alternatives to P2P file sharing can be found at: <http://www.educause.edu/legalcontent> [59].

Voter Registration

Delaware Tech encourages all of our students and employees to participate in our democracy. Registering to vote is one way that you can add your voice to this process. For more information on registering to vote in Delaware, please see <http://elections.delaware.gov/services/voter/placestoregister.shtml> [60].

Use of Federal Educational Funds

As mandated by the HEOA, the College does not use federal educational funds to lobby federal officials on any matter, including grants, contracts, and loans. Delaware Tech has not used federal educational funds to hire a registered lobbyist or pay for securing an appropriations earmark.
